

receiving its normal flow of rain-carrying storm systems.

The March 18, 1988 ABC-TV Nightly News reported, "Record low snowfall in February, 1988 is likely to make an existing water shortage even worse." "In all, ELEVEN WESTERN STATES WERE INVOLVED IN A DEVASTATING DRY SPELL LAST SUMMER. OFFICIALS FEAR IT MAY HAPPEN AGAIN." "...Rivers are ALREADY AT DANGEROUSLY LOW LEVELS" in some Western states.

NEW EVIDENCE OF SOVIET TESLA-SCALAR WEAPONS

Beginning in 1978, a short time after the Soviets started their Tesla scalar transmitters, a series of mysterious booms were heard off the East Coast of the United States. No normal explanation could be found for the powerful sounds which continued into 1979. Lt. Col. Thomas Bearden reported that the explosions were a direct byproduct of the Soviet Tesla ELF transmitters.

On November 21, 1987, the area of Beaumont, Texas was hit with a very loud boom. In addition to the noise, many residents felt a strange rumble in the ground. Local law enforcement officials are unable to explain what happened, according to the November 22, 1987 BEAUMONT ENTERPRISE.

During his own lifetime, Nikola Tesla frequently created ball lightning (a form of plasma) and giant lightning bolts with his transmitter. Shortly after the Soviets turned on their own Tesla magnifying transmitter in 1976, parts of the U.S.S.R. suddenly began to experience abnormal lightning bolts and mysterious lights in the sky.

Thomas Bearden's scientific article, STAR WARS NOW, stated that Tesla scalar weapons can be used in the "produce energy" mode to create A "MASSIVE ELECTRICAL FIREBALL" over cities. On September 23, 1977, such a form of electrical plasma was seen over the city of Petrozavodsk in Soviet Karelia, located close to the site of one of the early U.S.S.R. Tesla transmitters.

On August 13, 1986, the Associated Press reported, "People scattered over much of the eastern United States reported a mysterious light in the night sky and residents of Kentucky said they heard a boom and felt their houses shake. The events took place on August 12, 1986, about 10:15 p.m.

One witness, Edward Uiszkowski of Vestal, N.Y. said, "It looked like a bunch of fireworks followed by a white cloud." The AP report added, "There were similar reports in other parts of the East. The mysterious light was witnessed by Americans from Michigan, Maine, South Carolina, Louisiana and Kentucky.

" 'Some people said they saw A GREAT BIG BALL OF FIRE,' Clark County, Kentucky Sheriff Larry Lawson said. 'The people said their homes shook and windows vibrated as if there had been an explosion or earthquake, but it was just for a very few seconds. They said THE WHOLE SKY LIT UP,' which is exactly like the repeated observations of Soviet Tesla weapons (documented in Col. Bearden's book, FER-DE-LANCE) and also similar to the "air glow effect" created by the new U.S. weather-engineering system.

The August 14, 1986 U.S.A. TODAY described the events: "A spectacular light show that pranced across the night sky east of the Mississippi HAD ASTRONOMERS BAFFLED."

The August 14, 1986 WASHINGTON POST describe the mysterious lights and reported that Denise Sabatini, vice president of the Syracuse, N.Y. Astronomical Society stated, "IT DEFINATELY WAS NOT A METEOR. Meteors burn off after seconds. THIS LASTED FIVE TO SEVEN MINUTES."

The July 3, 1987 ARIZONA REPUBLIC described a mysterious boom which hit San Diego, California the previous day: "A sharp, startling boom jolted northern San Diego county during the night, but authorities said they don't know what caused the mysterious blast."

"...It sounded like a blast from a cannon. It was a big momentary shake. It is a mystery," said meteorologist Wilbur Shigehara of the National Weather Service. "No earthquake was recorded on seismographs at Pasadena, California. There was no seismic activity." The newspaper reported that the "boom could not be traced to an airplane or weather."

Shigehara added, "Last year, we had several shakes like this. IT HAPPENED THREE OR FOUR TIMES A DAY FOR A WEEK. WE NEVER FOUND OUT WHAT IT WAS."

On December 1, 1987, there was YET ANOTHER GIANT MYSTERIOUS LIGHT OVER THE EASTERN PART OF THE UNITED STATES. The December 2, 1987 WASHINGTON TIMES stated:

"Mysterious lights were seen from Virginia to New York" about 12:35 a.m. ... Eddie Quillen, a boiler room attendant at Wallops Island NASA Flight Center on Virginia's Eastern Shore reported seeing 'A BIG BLUE LIGHT THAT LIT THE WHOLE SKY ALMOST LIKE LIGHTNING.'

Quillen added, "After that, I saw two balls of like fire, only not a red fire...a white fire. That was one hell of a light, whatever it was."

The newspaper continued, "Reports described the lights as 'A FIREBALL.' There were no reports of rockets or planes crashing that could explain the big mystery."

WEATHER MODIFICATION OF ARCTIC WAS ORIGINALLY PLANNED BY LENIN

The September, 1987 OMNI MAGAZINE stated that a radical loss of ozone could cause "the stratosphere" to "heat up by as much as 40 degrees, warming the air close to the earth about 4 degrees and MELTING THE POLAR ICE CAPS."

Such a warming of the polar regions has long been a goal of Soviet leaders, starting with V. I. Lenin's 1921 appointment of Gelb Krshishanovsky to draw up plans to DAM THE BERING STRAIT. Fortunately, Lenin's scheme was never carried out because the early Bolsheviks had more immediate priorities.

However, the idea of warming up the Arctic stayed alive.

On February 24, 1987, the PBS-TV network carried a NOVA science show titled, "THE HOLE IN THE SKY." NOVA stated: "Antarctica--the coldest place on earth. Here a mysterious change has been detected in a vital element in the atmosphere. This invisible layer 15 miles high ACTS AS A SUNSCREEN AROUND THE EARTH--OUR ONLY PROTECTION FROM IT."

"Scientists warn that ozone depletion" would have "MAJOR EFFECTS ON HUMAN HEALTH, including: higher incidence of SKIN CANCER, CATARACTS, AND DEPRESSION OF THE IMMUNE SYSTEM. Losses of ozone would affect CLIMATE, DAMAGE THE GROWTH OF PLANTS AND DISTURB THE FOOD CHAIN."

To explain this sudden depletion of atmospheric ozone, liberal-establishment scientists and self-styled mass media "experts," claim that Freon-type gases are the culprit.

Many press and media stories have appeared that put the entire blame for the ozone loss on chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) gases, which are used in refrigeration, air conditioning, insulation and industrial solvents.

However, THE TRUTH is that CFC gases have been used for A LONG TIME and the large-scale depletion of the earth's ozone layer was A SUDDEN EVENT.
