

The "record 9.35 inch rainfall brought flash floods to parts of the city and suburban areas. The National Weather Service said IT WAS THE HEAVIEST RAIN IN CHICAGO SINCE RECORD KEEPING BEGAN 100 YEARS AGO."

The September 10, 1987 GRAND RAPIDS PRESS reported that southeastern Pennsylvania suffered large scale flooding when 8 inches of rain fell in a four hour period.

MAMMOTH FIRES BURN UP AMERICA

Nikola Tesla put on many personal demonstrations of artificial lightning during his lifetime. Artificial lightning has been one of the many different effects created by the Tesla scalar transmitters. (See YOUTH ACTION NEWS, May, 1987, for technical documentation).

During a three week period in July and August, 1986, the West experienced a month-long series of fires, blackening wide areas for hundreds of miles at a stretch from eastern Oregon across Idaho and Montana and into Wyoming. The August 24, 1986 NEW YORK TIMES stated:

"Federal authorities say THEY HAVE NEVER RECORDED SO MANY FIRES IN SUCH A SHORT PERIOD." The first fires "WERE TOUCHED OFF BY A SERIES OF RAINGLESS LIGHTNING STORMS."

During the summer of 1987, massive lightning-generated forest fires occurred ONCE AGAIN. The September 2, 1987 WASHINGTON TIMES reported, In two days alone, "CALIFORNIA HAD 4,854 LIGHTNING STRIKES THAT RESULTED IN 717 FIRES," stated John Carter, information officer at the Joint U.S. Forest Service and California Dept. of Forestry command post. In southern Oregon, lightning detectors recorded MORE THAN 1,700 LIGHTNING STRIKES, WITHIN 24 HOURS," said Denver James of the Forest Service in Portland.

The September 5, 1987 NEW YORK TIMES reported that HALF A MILLION ACRES OF FOREST AND BRUSH WERE BURNING IN EIGHT WESTERN STATES," with an army of 20,000 men and women trying to fight the blazes. The newspaper reported that these widespread fires were SET OFF BY DRY ELECTRICAL STORMS.

The fires were still smoldering 1-1/2 months later, when the October 20, 1987 NEW YORK TIMES reported that 772,500 acres in Northern California alone and 135,281 acres in Southern Oregon had been burned out.

The November 9, 1988 WASHINGTON TIMES reported that 13 Southern states had been hit with over 8,972 forest fires in late October, 1987--just as the mammoth fires in the Western states were dying down.

The November 9, 1987 WASHINGTON POST stated that in the previous two weeks, the U.S. SUFFERED THE LOSS OF MORE THAN 330,000 ACRES OF WOODLANDS." (in the South and NOT counting the forest fire devastation in the Western states).

SOVIET WEATHERWAR ATTACKS CONTINUE TO DEVASTATE AMERICA

Starting in December, 1987, a whole series of enormous storms swept across the American continent. The December 17, 1987 WASHINGTON TIMES described the "pre-winter storm that left record snowfall and 73 deaths, while blasting its way across the country." Snow hit northern Los Angeles County and 100 miles-per-hour winds hit the mountains and the "biggest surprise" of all was the snow that hit the beach at Malibu," where long-time residents could not recall any snow ever falling there before.

The same monster storm closed Chicago's O'Hare International Airport for the first time since 1979. "Paul Merzlock of the Weather Service said the storm, which COMBINED POWERFUL WINDS WITH SNOW, THUNDER, AND LIGHTNING AND HAIL, was 'THE STORM OF THE DECADE' for intensity'."

The same killer storm spawned deadly tornadoes in Arkansas and Mississippi and knocked out power across large parts of Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio.

One week later, ANOTHER huge storm system swept across America. Describing this late December storm, a YOUTH ACTION NEWS correspondent from Montana reported, "The Western Rockies in Colorado had 37 inches of snow, WITH NO ADVANCE WARNING. And In Iowa, THUNDER AND LIGHTNING PRECEDED THE SNOW STORM."

The December 29, 1987 WASHINGTON POST described the highly unusual characteristics which provide evidence of A DELIBERATELY CONTROLLED MOVEMENT OF THE BIG STORM:

"Even the National Weather Service missed it. ... 'We underestimated the storm,' Weather Service spokesman Jim Kapland said; 'A PART OF...THE STORM MOVED TO THE EAST: THE OTHER PART MOVED TO SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AND THEN MOVED BACK THIS WAY' (towards Denver, Colorado). WE THOUGHT IT WOULD GET WEAKER, BUT IT GOT STRONGER FOR REASONS WE CAN'T EXPLAIN."

West Memphis, Arkansas, which had been devastated by killer tornadoes from the Mid-December continental-size storm, was hit again by the mammoth late December Continental-size storm, when terrible flooding forced 2,000 people out of their homes. Wide areas of other parts of the nation were hit with flooding, ice storms, heavy snow, loss of power for long periods, and massive property destruction--ALL RESULTING FROM A SINGLE storm system.

On January 18, 1988, yet another super-size killer storm struck the West and then inflicted destruction and chaos ALL THE WAY ACROSS THE AMERICAN CONTINENT. The January 19, 1988 NEW YORK TIMES stated, "A storm dumped up to two feet of snow in the mountains of the West, after hammering California's coast with 12-foot waves. Seven deaths were blamed on the storm in California."

"The heart of the storm was a low pressure system THAT SENT BAROMETERS PLUNGING TO A READING OF 29.25, THE LOWEST LEVEL MEASURED AT LOS ANGELES IN 100 YEARS OF RECORD KEEPING, forecasters said. It created breakers up to 14 feet at Los Angeles. ... Other record barometer readings in California included 29.20 at Santa Maria and 29.265 at Bakersfield."

The same gigantic storm caused tornadoes in the South and 14 foot snow drifts in the Plains. It "wreaked havoc from the West Coast to the South" through "Wisconsin and Northern Michigan. ... The storm's reach could be felt as far east as New England and New York," reported the January 21, 1988 WASHINGTON POST.

In 1980, the U.S., especially the Pacific Northwest, suffered a catastrophic drought. The causes of that drought were described in the February 2, 1981 WASHINGTON POST: "There are two very large and very persistent high-pressure systems that have planted themselves over the West Coast and Rocky Mountains and REMAINED THERE FOR FOUR MONTHS. In America, SUCH LONG-LIVED WEATHER CENTERS WERE UNHEARD OF UNTIL 1977," WHICH IS IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE SOVIETS TURNED ON THEIR TESLA WEATHERWAR TRANSMITTERS.

In 1986, 1987 and continuing into 1988, the U.S.S.R. has once again utilized giant standing ELF waves to create several WEATHER BLOCKING MECHANISMS which are acting as a wall, to cut off the Pacific Northwest from
